- ⁵⁸ It is difficult to distinguish ancient Hebrews from other Semitic peoples from the archaeological record alone. The Hebrews while in Egypt were not yet Israelites. The Mosaic Law, which Paul described in Eph. 2:14 as a "dividing wall" between the Jews and the Gentiles, had not yet been given by God. The Hebrews in Egypt even engaged in the worship of idols (Jos 24:14; Ez 20:5-10, 23:3; see also, Ex 32:1; Lv 17:7; Ps(s) 106:7; Acts 7:39-43). The Hebrews at the time of the Sojourn were culturally indistinguishable from other Semitic Canaanites. (Camp, "Israel, Egypt, and the Exodus," 2–3)

⁸⁶ Kenyon ignored dating evidence that contradicted her conclusions such as scarabs of Egyptian pharaohs found at the tell, evidence that is considered highly relevant by all archaeologists. (Garstang, "A Third Season at Jericho. City and Necropolis," 150; Wood, "Did the Israelites Conquer Jericho? A New Look at the Archaeological Evidence," 52–53) In addition, Kenyon apparently ignored the bichrome ware found by Garstang (Wood, "Dating Jericho's Destruction: Bienkowski is Wrong on All Counts," 48) as well as other pottery that was discovered, such as chocolate-on-white ware (Fischer, "Chocolate-on-White Ware: Typology, Chronology, and Provenance: The Evidence from Tell Abu al-Kharaz, Jordan Valley," 19, 22) and locally made pottery (Kennedy, "The Israelite Conquest: History or Myth?," 77–79) that may have the same dating relevance as bichrome ware.
